General Report Comments: The sloth was observed together with an emperor tamarin, both appearing to be in good physical condition. Suitable shelter was provided for both animals. The box referenced in the complaint was inspected and found to be without a lid, which is appropriate as it allows the sloth to use it as a form of enrichment and a place to hide. Bedding was available for the animals to rest and sleep. while also offering a space for the animals to retreat when desired. This is consistent with natural behaviour, as wild animals may seek seclusion at times. Adequate perches and enrichment were provided, and the animals appeared to be compatible, with no visible signs of injury observed. No immediate welfare concerns were identified during the inspection. However, it should be noted that, as an organisation, we remain opposed to the keeping of wild animals in captivity, as they are naturally adapted to live in the wild where they can express full freedom of movement.
