1 x male Weimaraner has skin cancer presenting on the nose.

General Report Comments: Upon arrival I immediately saw the Weimaraner with a wound on his nose. I was informed by the owner that the dog had been diagnosed with skin cancer that is presenting on the nose. The open sores on the nose was attracting a lot of flies. According to the owner the dog has medication to keep him comfortable until such time that his quality of life deteriorates and they have to humanely euthanase him. Up until now he is still very active and eating well. I advised that the owner purchase something for the nose to help soothe it as well as keep flies away, I recommended Shoo Fly ointment. The rest of the dogs were in satisfactory body condition. The two Dachshunds sleep inside the house at night, with the rest of the dogs sleeping outside in the back yard. Three large kennels are present in the back yard, as well as, containers filled with water. The dogs are fed a diet of Alzu Dog Food. Every morning the dogs receive treats.
