Comments by Inspector:

Upon arrival, myself and Inspector Rowan Davids met with Martin, the Supervisor and manager of Arum Lily farm and sales. He granted us access to the site, and walked with us for the inspection. The farm currently stocks sheep, goats and cattle.

~~The sheep is all seperated in their own pens as per breed and price for sale. The pens are all in sheltered buildings, with appropriate bedding. The pens are all fairly hygienically clean, and had feed containers and water troughs in them. The sheep are all in fair body condition, with no issues or welfare concerns noted.~~

The goats are all in their own pens as well, under adequate shelter and with access to clean potable water. There is feed available too, and no overcrowding. The bedding was adequate and the general hygiene of the pen was fair as well. No compromised goats were seen, no welfare issues noted.

The cattle were kept in big paddocks with a sheltered section where the water and feed is, and an open air section. There was clean water troughs there, as well as feed available. The area was also clean , and the sheltered section had bedding for the cattle as well.

We also observed handling of the animals, which were fairly adequate.

When customers buy an animal, we observed the staff putting a blindfold over the eyes to minimize stress of transportation. The animals were loaded into vehicles correctly and as per regulation.

Several sales of animals were observed, and the handling and transportation of the animals were deemed adequate further. For trucks, there is also an adjustable ramp with non slip races available, and the winch attached allows to adjust the height.

Today we observed a cow being loaded after being sold. The cow was loaded on to a small truck, which had the sides covered by metal grating and had shavings and bedding for non slip flooring. The truck was roadworthy and was deemed fit to transport the animal.

Thus, during our time at the farm we found no concerns anymore, as well as no tying of the animals. Case can be closed, NFA.
