Comments:	spoke with Brandon, who confirmed his availability for a meeting on Wednesday . He also inquired about the status of the puppies he surrendered to the SPCA. I informed him that the puppies will undergo an examination and will be considered for adoption if deemed suitable. As a matter of record, it is worth noting that Brandon had previously failed to provide adequate care for the puppies, resulting in them being found on someone's property. Unfortunately, the puppies were subjected to abuse and were beaten after allegedly damaging plants on the property. Despite this, Brandon did not seek veterinary care for the puppies or provide them with necessary treatment. Instead, he and his wife have shifted blame to the property owner, rather than acknowledging their own responsibility in the matter. The SPCA's involvement was necessitated by Brandon's failure to provide proper supervision and care for the animals, allowing them to roam freely outside the property and be exposed to harm.
