Comments:	A105502 – Bird Collection Report Upon arrival at the property, I hooted, but no one came out. I then contacted the owner using the number provided. He answered the call and opened the front door for us. We proceeded through the kitchen to the garage, where the birds were kept. Upon entering the garage, we observed birds housed in cages of adequate size. The birds had adequate shelter, food, and water. The owner explained that the birds in these cages were juveniles and young birds. He also claimed that all the birds were sick. At the far end of the garage, we observed a large cage containing several birds. These birds also had adequate shelter, food, and water. The owner confirmed that he kept the adult birds in that cage. After assessing the situation, we proceeded with loading the birds. We collected approximately 69 birds that the owner surrendered. After loading the birds, the owner donated R400, and a receipt was issued to him. We then proceeded with the collection. Based on my observations, I recommend that the SPCA conduct a follow-up visit after two to three months to check whether the owner has more birds on the property. The owner appeared to be a breeder, considering the presence of both young and adult birds. A follow-up visit would help establish whether he has continued breeding or keeping birds after the collection.
