Comments:	Refer to INSP232197 Upon arrival, accompanied by Cadet Bamanye, we proceeded on foot through the informal settlement, where we encountered several dog owners. A language barrier was present, as English was not their first language. During our visit, we identified eight puppies, approximately three to four weeks old, who were still nursing from their mother and in the process of weaning. Five adult dogs were also identified. The animals could benefit from sterilisation, deworming, and tick and flea treatment. It was further established that another camp was situated further down the railway line in the same area. This camp also had several dogs that could benefit from assistance. Although some of these dogs had already been sterilised, they could still benefit from tick and flea treatment and deworming, while sterilisation could be considered for those that had not yet undergone the procedure. There was no interest expressed in surrendering any of the animals. Based on the observations made during the visit, approximately ten dogs in the area may require assistance with sterilisation and parasite control. Further assessment and coordination would be necessary to establish the exact number of animals requiring assistance.
